DEATH ENDS CAREER OF NOTED MINE OWNER

Risked Fortune to Back Opinion and Struck Gold While Onlookers Sneered.

PICTURESQUE FIGURE

MELBOURNE, April 7.

The death is announced of George Langell, the Bendigo mine owner.

The death of Mr. Lansell removes one of the most picturesque figures in the history of Australian mining.

Mr. Lansell was the chief owner of the most important mines at Bendigo, the chief centre of quartz mining in Victoria.

By his courage and faith in the future of the Bendigo field Mr. Lansell at one period in its history prevented the field from being practically abandoned.

The gold in the shallower workings had been exhausted, and all the experiments in sinking deeper were failures.

"You must go deeper still," said Mr. Lansell, and risked the whole of his fortune to justify his opinion.

The workings reached a depth beyond which gold had never been found in Australia. Mr. Lansell held on confidently, Jests and half-pitying sympathy passed by him unheeded. Down, down, went his miners till nearly a mile below the surface of the earth they found the rich gold-bearing quartz.

Then it was found that Mr. Lansell had been provident as well as pucky. He had hought controlling interests in most of the mines that were their being worked in a half-hoarted fashion, but which proved veritable bonanzas at lower depths.

Mr. Lansell's pluck made him a mill-

"I do not realize it; and yet," she added, "I am not so dull as not to appreciate all that is being done. I think it is the nicest things that are being done for us that are the hardest to speak about. "I cannot tell the public in new words that I love them. It fills me with delight to think that for fifty years they have been faithful to me.

"All this makes me (hink about my jubilee. I am overjoyed and depressed by turns; smiles and tears. Just think of the week ending April 28—the anniversary of my appearance as Mamillius in 'Winter's Tale,' with Charles Kean fifty years ago. I shall play every night, except Friday, in 'Captain Brassbound's Conversion,' at the Court Theatre; on Friday as Mistress Page at His Majesty's Theatre, and another evening in a small part at the Adelphi. Then on Sunday evening, April 29, comes the dinner at the Hotel Cedil."

Miss Terry disclosed the secret of her success—she has ever loved best the part in which she is at the moment playing. Today, therefore, Mr. Shaw's play is her favorite.
